“ I support CWB because we don't just preserve our maritime heritage, we keep it alive! We help people focus on what's important in this fast-paced world: enjoying the water, learning new skills, helping children develop their potential. And what better way to do that than rebuilding and sailing a wooden boat.”

LETTER FROM DICK WAGNER

We began with just a dream: create a place of programs with small traditional boats for people of all ages and abilities to build and use. Our process of learning would be the same way we were taught to talk, walk and ride bikes. Mom and Dad were our mentors.

Each year we would expand and enhance our workshops of maritime heritage. 2013 was another step up. Our brilliant staff added more programs for more people with more challenges. Once again we are the mentors of learning by doing.

I have seen Ivy League college students and high school drop outs take the same programs, leaving with the same "A" report cards. They both discover new dimensions of solving complex problems in building and sailing classic boats. Even adults refuse to go home after taking one of our workshops - they have the same pride in their accomplishments as the youth - they want to learn more. After 30 years of hands on programs I think we scored another education and entertainment winner in 2013.

LETTER FROM BETSY DAVIS

During 2013 The Center for Wooden Boats hosted over 150,000 visitors, offered programs at three campuses, gave over 6,000 free boat rides, invited over 3,800 young people to learn about Seattle's history while paddling on Lake Union, celebrated the Lake Union Wooden Boat Festival with over 25,000 people, and opened the FishOn! Exhibit telling the story of resort boating in the Puget Sound region (named the #1 exhibit in the King County!).

With an eye to the future CWB finished the design of its new Wagner Education Center in Lake Union Park and received incredible community support with leadership gifts of $1 million from the Norcliffe Foundation and $990,000 from a competitive grant program administered by the State of Washington. CWB added lighting on its docks in Seattle and ran electricity to the Oarhouse and Pavilion (increasing safety and convenience) and started building a new safety boat at Cama Beach.

CWB continued to grow partnerships - launching a new joint field trip in conjunction with the Museum of History and Industry and expanding its "Science of Sailing" camp in partnership with the Pacific Science Center. CWB expanded its programs for underserved youth in conjunction with YouthCare's Orion Center, Seattle Youth Violence Prevention Initiative, the Stanwood School district and Snohomish County Detention Alternatives at Cama Beach.

While CWB innovates every day we also ensure accountability to our friends and supporters. In 2013 CWB was accredited by the Better Business Bureau, had a "clean audit" on its financials, and engaged in a region-wide program to measurably improve the quality of youth development programs as part of the Youth Program Quality Initiative.

It has been exciting to see the smiles, the self-confidence, the learning, and the community that grew throughout the year as an outgrowth of CWB's programs and activities. CWB continues to change lives one boat at a time, thanks to volunteers donating over 21,000 hours of time and an incredible range of community.

Betsy Davis
CWB Executive Director

NOTABLE HIGHLIGHTS

PRESERVATION

1. In both Seattle and at Cama Beach, visitors learned about Puget Sound's historic boathouses with an original exhibit that was funded in part by the National Trust for Historic Preservation
2. CWB staff and volunteers improved care of the historical boats in CWB's collection and built a comprehensive maintenance plan for the boats used in hands-on programs
3. CWB hosted experts from around the country who together successfully defined the best way to document traditional boats using digital photography and state-of-the-art software, funded by the Institute for Museum and Library Services

LIFELONG LEARNING

4. CWB is a great place for families to learn together. In Family Boatbuilding 3 generations worked side by side to build an El Toro; families also participated in multi-generational sailing lessons with ages ranging from 8 to 65
5. Our Boatwright in Residence program provides an opportunity for mentorship in the trade, bringing great skills to CWB and offering strong work experience to participants
6. In the Boatshop, volunteers were filled to capacity at 20 shifts / week – providing free hands-on learning for people from all walks of life

YOUTH

7. Over 10,000 young people learned something new through hands-on activities: with 3,800 in field trips, 6,000 building toy boats, 500 underserved youth participating in Day Sailing, 350 young people taking dinghy sailing and boatbuilding classes
8. In 2013, 25 young people built a foundation for future success in the Job Skills Training Program at both campuses, learning both the hard and soft skills necessary to seek and secure fulfilling careers in the maritime trades
9. Partnerships with local teachers and the Museum of History & Industry resulted in a new field trip, "The Significance of Salmon," bringing a new level of curricular excellence and community engagement to our Field Trip program

ACCESS

- 10. Over 6,500 people experienced the joy of traditional small craft through public boat rides at Seattle and Cama Beach campuses
- 11. The public had a chance to sail without owning their own boat or belonging to a yacht club -- the Blanchard Junior Knockabouts collectively sailed around 8,000 miles in 2013
- 12. Stories of the sea are beloved by all ages. In 2013, over 1,000 toddlers and adults came to hear them at Tugboat Storytime
- 13. The Model Boat pond attracted over 4,000 children and adults in 2013, providing a unique opportunity to learn, play, and connect at the water's edge

COMMUNITY

- 14. A partnership with Seattle Public Library strengthens our community reach by providing rowing passes to anyone with a Seattle Public Library card
- 15. First Thursday's have become a bustling time at South Lake Union park. CWB and park partners work collaboratively to provide activities that will engage, educate and entertain people in this unique heritage destination
- 16. Access to CWB's docks, exhibits and boats is better than ever, thanks to over $70,000 of donated services from about a dozen local companies

The Center for Wooden Boats is a homegrown Seattle institution, uniquely integrating the best aspects of being a museum, a community center and a park. In financial partnership with these regional corporations, foundations and governments, it continues to receive the funding necessary to ensure delivery of its mission and to remain a leader in developing maritime-based experiential programs for youth and families within the community.

CAPITAL CAMPAIGN

2013 brought outstanding support for CWB's capital projects; to improve CWB's existing floating facilities and to support construction of CWB's future Wagner Education Center in Lake Union Park. For more information about these exciting projects visit: campaign page!!

The changing environment in which CWB operates requires constant innovation. The Wagner Education Center will play an essential role in the future of CWB, as the organization continues to expand its quality programming and services while remaining focused on changing lives, one boat at a time. The new Education Center will serve as a cohesive 'center of gravity' for the various activities and programs provided by our staff and volunteers.

VOLUNTEERS

Volunteer support makes it possible for our programs to thrive and our collection to be maintained. We are grateful to all of the over 500 volunteers active in our corps, but we would like to extend a special thanks to the following volunteers who logged 50 hours or more in 2013.
